Ready for our close-up: Hub meets Hollywood

Roll 'em. Cool sights await onlookers at the sets of blockbusters filmed in Boston.

Looking to catch a glimpse of Kristin Wiig hanging out in Chinatown or watch Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson surrender to a SWAT team?

You're in luck. Spend your lunch break or weekend afternoon on just the right street corner at just the right time and you might get to watch movie magic happen in the streets of Boston.

Among this year's beneficiaries of the state's generous film tax break, the "Ghostbusters" reboot, starring Wiig, Chris Hemsworth, Melissa McCarthy and Leslie Jones, is in production here in the city, as is an apparent buddy comedy fronted by The Rock and with a cast that includes Aaron Paul and Kevin Hart, according to IMDB.

It can be a hectic scene down by the film sets. Big-budget blockbuster producers, it seems, have low tolerance for gawkers.

Photos are off-limits. The contracted security guards standing around sets' perimeters are upbeat and friendly for the most part, but if you pull out your iPhone too conspicuously, prepare for a stern talking-to.

Some of the guards have been seen carrying big black umbrellas to block views for overzealous Snapchat users, news media and tourists with zoom lenses.

Standing around too long also seems to be a no-no. On a Thursday afternoon near the "Ghostbusters" set, security made efforts to keep foot traffic moving, every now and then announcing halfheartedly that everyone had to move along. A few small groups stood around for 15 minutes or more, and weren't punished for it.

Staying inconspicuous — and patient — can have big payoffs, or little ones.

In Chinatown,some of the big machines of movie-making were at work: a giant white rectangle being maneuvered on a crane, a dinosaur-like rolling extendable camera rig being carted around, a mini-explosion and puff of smoke, the purpose of which is unknown. Onlookers said there might have been a scene involving motorcycles.

Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson (right, in yellow) filming on High Street. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI/METRO

Otherwise, it was tame, and only kind of worth the occasional hassle from set-minders.

On Sunday in the Financial District, The Rock — who looks like a human superhero, even at a block's distance — was filming a movie called "Central Intelligence."

Sundays are eerily quiet in the Financial District. It's one of the few places in Massachusetts where even Starbucks and Dunkin' Donuts shut down.

So there were maybe a dozen other onlookers when a big black SWAT van rolled down High Street and a swarm of officers surrounded the former WWE brawler in front the 100 High building, then did it again.

Can the wrestler-turned-leading man talk, or punch his way out of this one? Find out in theaters.

Some Bostonians seeing red instead of stars

Maybe you aren't as entertained by all the activity downtown.

Parking spaces have been swallowed up, traffic during shoots can be a nightmare and maybe the idea of someone on Hollywood's payroll shooing you off a public street rubs you the wrong way.

Boston-area tweets reflect some of that frustration.

And Gov. Charlie Baker thinks the Hollywood-ification of Boston might not be worth all the tax breaks the state currently grants to companies making movies here. He has argued for ending the program.

Either way, the cameras will keep rolling in the Hub this season.

So head downtown to take a peek. You might see something cool.

MBTA seeks riders' input on service

Survey. MBTA riders can sound off on service in a survey on the agency's website.

Enough complaining at the bus stop and on T stop benches. Speak truth to power about your MBTA grievances via a survey that's now live on the service's website.

The interactive questionnaire collects data on how, when and why you take public transportation, and what your personal gripes are with your line of choice.

It also asks riders to do some soul-searching about the tough choices involved in fixing the network of busses and trains.

Should the MBTA prioritize trips to stations with the most people waiting for a train, or to stations near hospitals and social services? Should MBTA leadership be more concerned about cutting costs or reducing environmental impact?

How inconvenient is it to you when your train is 5 minutes late? 15?

With visual aids, the survey asks how much crowding you can tolerate before you'll give up on a train entirely. Can you handle Esplanade-on-the-4th-level density? How about the Green Line after a Sox game?

The answers will inform the MBTA's service delivery policy, which is undergoing its first update since 2010, said Jason Johnson, the MBTA's deputy press secretary.

"The Service Delivery Policy is the primary tool that the MBTA uses to guide the design and evaluation of our transit services to meet the needs of our riders," Johnson said. "It sets the type of service we will offer ... and the metrics we use to evaluate it."

DOGS DAYS FOR DEMS

The Foreman forecast

TOM FOREMAN

TOM FOREMAN PREDICTS THIS WEEK IN POLITICS. HE IS A CNN CORRESPONDENT AND AUTHOR OF THE UPCOMING BOOK "MY YEAR OF RUNNING DANGEROUSLY: A DAD, A DAUGHTER, AND A RIDICULOUS PLAN."

Like good hot dogs in the heat of summer, Democrats are on a roll. From Supreme Court rulings to social trends, an awful lot of issues are tilting their way and they are enjoying it with relish. With that in mind, here are my three things to watch this week in politics.

1. TAKING THE WURST OF IT: The Confederate flag fight has unfurled in Congress with a fury, and Dems are slapping the mustard on Republicans; depicting them as stodgy at best, racist at worst. Never mind that a GOP governor led the charge to take down the flag in South Carolina. On the national level the fight over when, where and how the flag might wave has Dems scoring political points. The GOP is in a bind because some conservatives see this as not merely placating those who find the flag offensive, but also demonizing Southern heritage. You can bet Dems will keep fanning the outrage because at the moment the Repubs are wobbling around like the Minions.

2. IN A PICKLE: Remember all that optimistic nattering from the White House about a pending nuke deal with Iran? Not so much now. The talks have been extended for a third time while the administration is steadily lowering expectations of success. Congressional types on both sides of the aisle are raising grave concerns about the details, and approval seems far from certain. This could finally be the make or break week, with repercussions either way.

3. GIMME ONE WITH EVERYTHING: Wisconsin Governor Scott Walker will wade into the 2016 presidential race this week, bringing the total number of GOP contenders to 109. Not really, but there are more than a dozen and top Dems are yukking it up over the size of the field. But they might want to stifle their giggles. Each new player on the GOP side is another person to snipe at Hillary Clinton's campaign, and all those pot shots could produce a Dem defeat no matter how things look now.

Three things to know

1 Chicago rapper Capo and baby killed in gang shooting

Chicago rapper Capo, a member of Chief Keef's "Glo Gang," has died in a gang-related shooting over the weekend that also resulted in the death of a baby boy who was struck by a vehicle fleeing the scene, the Chicago Sun-Times reported on Sunday.

The death of Marvin Carr, who went by the name Capo, was confirmed by the group's manager, Renaldo Hess, according to the newspaper. Hess could not be reached for comment.

Soon after the shooting, a vehicle believed to be carrying the possible offenders in the shooting struck 13-month-old Dillon Harris, who later died. REUTERS

2 RI beach reopened a day after explosion

A busy beach in Narragansett, Rhode Island, was reopened on Sunday, a day after a small explosion injured a woman, a state official said.

The state's fire marshal was investigating the cause of the explosion that occurred around noon on Saturday at Salty Brine Beach on the state's southern coastline, said Rayna Maguire, spokeswoman for the Rhode Island Department of Environmental Management. The beach was evacuated after the incident.

A representative for the fire marshal was not immediately available for comment.

It was not clear what caused the explosion, Kurt Blanchard of the Rhode Island Environment Police, said. REUTERS

3 Father of missing Calif. baby named 'person of interest'

Authorities searched on Sunday in the Redding, California, area for a missing 6-month-old girl and her father, whom police described as a person of interest.

Investigators, volunteers and police units with dogs took part in the search for Ember Graham, who disappeared 10 days ago, said the Shasta County Sheriff's Office in a Facebook statement on Sunday.

Matthew Graham, 23, reported that he discovered his daughter Ember missing from her crib in his home on July 2, according to a statement on the sheriff's website. REUTERS

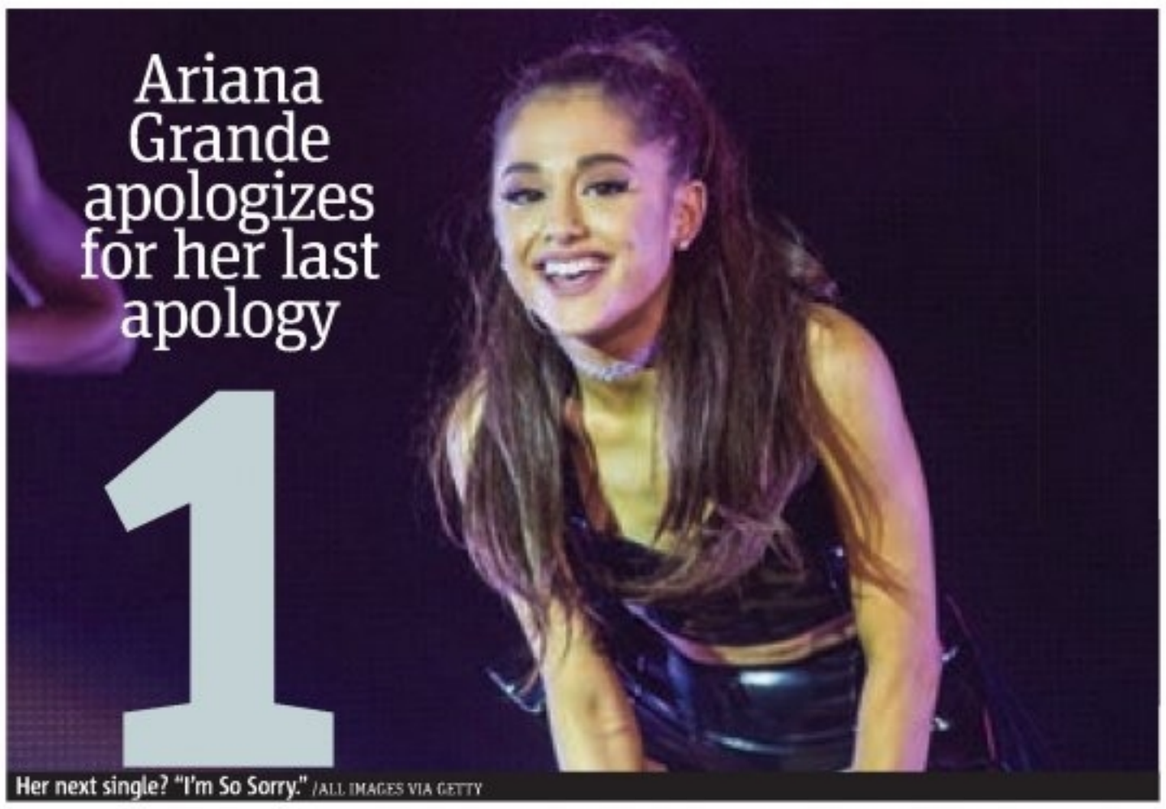
THE WORD

Ned Ehrbar takes on the world of gossip.

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

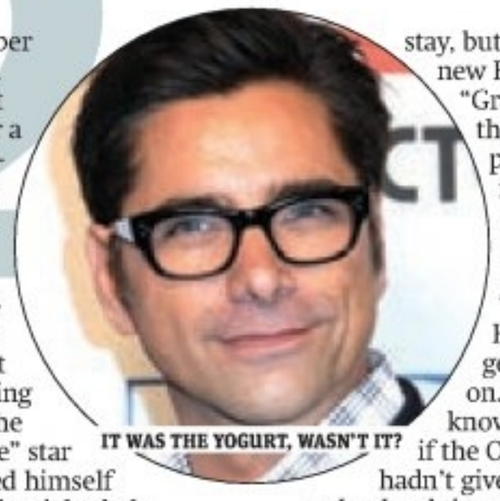
1 Ariana Grande apologizes for her last apology



Her next single? "I'm So Sorry." /ALL IMAGES VIA GETTY

Arianna Grande took another stab — or should we say another lick? — at the whole public apology thing, as she felt her first attempt at trying to mollify critics after her "Ugh, I hate Americans" doughnut debacle didn't really do the job. I mean, she wasn't the only one who thought the whole "I actually love America and Americans" statement from last week wasn't enough. So Grande took to the interwebs to post an uncomfortably close-up video apology for her apology. "I kind of missed my opportunity to actually sincerely apologize and express how I was feeling because I was too busy preaching about my feelings with the food industry, which is not, like, relative," she, like, says. "I reacted in a way that wasn't necessary, to say the least, and also wasn't me at all. I apologize for my poor choice of words and my behavior. Seeing how ugly it looks when you behave a certain way makes you never want to behave that way again." Totes, girlfriend. Totes.

2 Uncle Jesse heads to rehab



IT WAS THE YOGURT, WASN'T IT?

So remember when John Stamos got popped for a DUI in Beverly Hills a few weeks ago? Well, in a slightly delayed reaction to that embarrassing incident, the "Full House" star has checked himself into a residential rehab facility to help him tackle some substance abuse issues, according to TMZ. It's unclear how long he's planning to stay, but he's got new Fox sitcom "Grandfathered" premiering in the fall and the Netflix series "Fuller House" to get to work on. And you know, maybe if the Olsen twins hadn't given him such a hard time about whether or not they'd be a part of that, he wouldn't have gone off the deep end like that.

3 Mila Kunis keeps a gun in the house

It must be awkward when the topic of gun ownership comes up with British press, but Mila Kunis isn't one to shy away from a question. "I will say this: We have a gun at the house. But would I give it to my daughter as a gift at 15? No," Kunis tells the Telegraph's Luxury magazine. (It's unclear if they mentioned the 15th birthday thing or if Kunis just had quinceanera gifts for baby Wyatt on the brain.) "My child shouldn't be as well trained as us, nor should she know there is a weapon in the house — ever." Let's just hope she's not reading this, then.

Also, in case anyone's thinking about questioning Kunis' badass bona fides, know this: "I can take a gun apart and put it back together blindfolded," she humble-brags. "I probably wouldn't have the gun if I didn't have stalkers or people constantly trying to break into my house."

4 J.K. Rowling shuts down Serena Williams basher

It's getting to be a bit redundant, but J.K. Rowling really is one of our reigning social media aces. The British author continues to offer master classes in shutting down fools. The latest example? Rowling tweeted a picture of her with tennis champ Serena Williams, celebrating the athlete's performance at Wimbledon, but a follower had to go and respond that the "main reason for her success is that she is built like a man." Rowling wasn't having it, though, sharing that tweet, another picture of Williams and the message, "Yeah, my husband looks just like this in a dress. You're an idiot." Oh, and she has 4.9 million followers.

Film. Jon Hamm joins the ranks of the animated in "Minions."

Groovy times

Herb (Jon Hamm) romances Scarlet (Sandra Bullock) in "Minions." / UNIVERSAL PICTURES

Jon Hamm's latest role calls for him to be suave, debonair and have a certain 1960s flair. But this is certainly not Don Draper. "That's a stretch," Hamm says of comparing his "Minions" character with his "Mad Men" legacy. Herb, his villainous character, "definitely has his own style, and I don't think it's very similar to Don's."

Hamm GETTY IMAGES

But that doesn't mean the character doesn't seem a bit, shall we say, familiar. "If there's an analogy to be made, I think it's closer to Austin Powers, at least from a sartorial sense," Hamm admits. "That was the one thing I was careful about. I didn't want to veer too far into Austin Powers territory."

Hamm gets animated for "Minions" as the husband to the world's first female supervillain (voiced by Sandra Bullock) and is something of a villain himself. The happily married do-bad-ers share a bond and common respect that Hamm found to be entirely un-'60s. "It's almost subversive in a way. It's couched in this sort of cartoon-y evil sense, but it's very progressive," he says. "Herb is a hepcat. He's very, very comfortable in who he is, and he loves his wife, and she loves him right back. That's the really kind of lovely part of their relationship."

Already being a fan of the "Despicable Me" franchise, Hamm was more than happy to come on board for the prequel focusing on the gibberish-spouting yellow henchmen. But that doesn't necessarily mean he'd want a set of minions of his own, of course.

"Knowing what I know about how effective they are at doing their jobs, I probably wouldn't assign them any tasks that really needed to be done well," he says. "Like picking up dry cleaning — all of your clothes would be ruined. Like, immediately. I would say, 'Go mow the lawn,' and the lawn would be lit on fire, you know? But it would be great if you had one around, just to hang out with."

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

One more thing

Education through "Looney Tunes"

A huge animation fan since childhood, Jon Hamm is well aware of the power of children's entertainment. "I wouldn't know anything about opera if it wasn't for Bugs Bunny. That was my entire introduction to opera music," he says. "It's the combination of the high and the low that I thought was very cool. I had no concept of it as a kid. You just think it's hilarious that Bugs Bunny is a lady Viking. That's funny! And then you realize, 'Why do I know that? Why do I know all of the words to "The Marriage of Figaro"' — because of Bugs Bunny."

Aries By mixing business with pleasure, you will be able to tie up loose ends. Plan to celebrate your achievements while enjoying company.

Taurus Conservative investments should be part of your financial plan. Don't jump at a deal that lacks substance just because others think you should.

Gemini You will get upset if you let a reckless emotional state dictate your actions. Think matters through before you make a life-altering move.

Cancer You will receive mixed signals from someone close to you. Don't jump to conclusions or act on hasty assumptions.

Leo Your popularity will soar if you dedicate your time to a cause. You will have no problem drumming up support for your projects.

Virgo Joint endeavors will not turn out well. Sharing your plans will backfire. Someone will try to take credit for your ideas. Listen and observe.

Libra Don't waste time fretting over events you can't control. Your concepts will prove successful if you can enlist help.

Scorpio You will stress yourself out if you don't learn to say no to demanding people. Take care of your health by putting your needs first.

Sagittarius Take time to consider how a partnership will impact the rest of your life. Professional interests are best put on the back burner.

Capricorn Unresolved health issues will surface if you continue to set an unrealistic pace. An old friend will make moves to regain the relationship.

Aquarius Invest in your skills and knowledge. If you dedicate your efforts to something you feel passionate about, you'll get amazing results.

Pisces When it comes to improving your environment, do what you think best. Bowing to what others want will stifle your confidence. EUGENIA LAST

HOW TO GET AHEAD

The secret to getting unstuck

A Stanford professor tells us how to get started on any project.

RAQUEL LANERI
raquel.laneri@metro.us

Everyone gets stuck. Sometimes we get tripped up completing the simplest tasks — like finding a misplaced file on our computer or picking what to eat for lunch. Sometimes we run into a mental block when working on a creative project or assignment — like, um, an article about getting unstuck. (Seriously, it took a long time to start writing those two sentences.)

And other times, it's the big stuff that leaves us paralyzed with indecision or self-doubt: what we want to do with our lives, where we want to live, whether — or when — we want to start a family.

Stanford professor Bernard Roth teaches an entire class on getting stuff done. His students come up with and complete one big task per term, which can be anything from producing a radio show to building a rocket to completing a triathlon. His new book, "The Achievement Habit: Stop Wishing, Start Doing, and Take Command of Your Life," applies the insights he's gleaned from 40 years of teaching people how to achieve their goals.

We asked Roth for some suggestions on how to just get started already.

Reframe your problem

The reason why so many people get stuck? Because, Roth says, they're often asking the wrong question or identifying the wrong thing as the problem.

"For example, the other day, I rented a car, and I couldn't find where the release was for the gas tank cap," he explains. "I spent about 20 minutes trying to find the release button before I saw a similar car getting gas. I went over, and I said, 'Where did you get the release?' He said, 'There is no release, just open the cap.'"

So if Roth had asked himself, "How do I get the cap open?" instead of, "How do I find the release button?" he may not have had a problem at all.

This works for not only the most mundane, everyday tasks but for the monumental ones too. Says Roth: "If people back off and reframe their question and find the right problem, often the answer is right there."

Draw it out

In his book, Roth includes 22 exercises that can help readers conquer a mental block, and a lot of them include visuals — from storyboards to mind maps to all sorts of diagrams. Visuals not only help clarify and give shape to an idea, he says. They also unleash creative thinking. "I love words — I wrote a book with words — but synthesizing information visually is more holistic for most of us," says Roth. "Pictures encapsulate so much more information and nuance; they're more evocative."

Work really, really hard

As much as drawing maps, brainstorming, talking your problems out or even rearranging your workspace can help speed along the creative process, there's one technique that Roth swears by: hard work. "Sometimes things come to me in a flash, but most of the time, they come after a lot of hard work and frustration," he says.

And often, you have to start working before feeling inspired. "There's no magic bullet — most of the time, attention and intention and just doing are the most important and productive things you can do."

Self-made

Sometimes, in order to achieve our dreams, we need to do some self-evaluation and change our image of ourselves. "We are who we are, but that's not who we are," says Roth, who says that most people's self-image is based on that of their parents or siblings. "And the good news is we're not stuck with it. Doing stuff is a good way to change your self-image because many people say, 'I can't do that' or 'I can't eat that,' and so if you do it, it's empowering."

FATHER TIME ALWAYS WINS

Classic horseshoe pattern balding, a flat tire across the waist and an inability to recover from a night of alcohol abuse are signs that you're getting old. So is a declining skill set in football.

There are lots of problems with targeting "over the hill" players in fantasy drafts. The worst is paying a premium for a player's name even though their game isn't what it once was. Heightened injury risk and potential for a reduced role are other troubling complications. Avoid these guys with one foot in the grave.

Manning your coffin

Peyton Manning was a subaverage quarterback last season well before his Week 15 quad injury. The team saw it, reducing his responsibility in favor of a ground-based attack that averaged 29.2 running back carries per game over the final seven weeks.

This offseason, run-centric play caller Gary Kubiak was brought in and the Broncos reportedly tried to trade Manning. Expect him to crumble down the stretch again this year (likely the final year of his career), meaning we are better off waiting until the later rounds for a Cam Newton, Matt Ryan, Tony Romo or Eli Manning type.

NBA first impressions

These youngsters are tearing up Summer League:

- Aaron Gordon, PF, Magic - Showing he's ready to leap past Channing Frye.
- Myles Turner, C, Pacers - With Roy Hibbert gone, the defensive-minded Pacers will count on Turner
- Rodney Hood, SF, Jazz - It's crowded on the wing in Utah, but Hood is miles ahead of the competition.

Peyton Manning won't see as many attempts in 2015. / GETTY IMAGES

Rowdy no more

The artist formerly known as "Rowdy Roddy White" is now "Underneath Possession Target Roddy White." It doesn't quite have the same ring. Roddy's once indestructible body has failed him over the last two seasons and his effectiveness is waning sharply as well. Even when All-World "X" dominator Julio Jones missed a game last year, Harry Douglas got more targets from Matt Ryan. White, no longer a threat to defenses, will settle for a shallow role as Kyle Shanahan's "Z."

The Bell tolls

Joique Bell has only been on the fantasy map for three seasons, but he's 28 years old and coming off multiple surgeries to his lower body. Joique has also averaged under 4 yards per carry in each of the last two seasons, and the Lions used a second-round pick on explosive Nebraska running back Ameer Abdullah. Bell isn't going to fall off the face of the Earth, but a passing of the feature-back baton to Abdullah at some point during the season is likely. The Lions, desperate to get production out of their run game, aren't going to get it from Bell.
